FOUND GUILTY

JURY RETURNS VERDICT OF MURDER IN FIRST DE- GREE AGAINST GUG- LIELMO.

Case Comes to Speedy End and Defense Submits No Argument
—Letter from His Sweetheart.
Other News.

Portland, July 1.—Portland Journal:—Unexpectedly at 4 o'clock, after a brief opening argument for the state by Assistant District Attorney Adams' defendant's attorneys in the case of the state against Frank Guglielmo rested their case and without argument left it in the hands of the court and jury. Their action came as a surprise to District Attorney Manning, who had not expected that the case would get to the jury until today.

Interesting only in its suddenness, it was the sharp termination of the trial of a self-confessed murderer so plainly and indisputably guilty that even the audience had grown weary of the blunt and bloody details of the crime. Frank Guglielmo, a young Italian saloon keeper, was accused of the murder of Freda Garacio, 16-year-old daughter of an Italian laborer residing on Harrison street. Guglielmo in a fit of jealous rage because she had withdrawn her promise to marry him, went to her house and shot the young girl dead where she stood working at the ironing board in her mother's kitchen.

Under such circumstances it was not surprising that 30 minutes after the jury left the court room word was sent in that they had arrived at a verdict. At 10 minutes after five o'clock Foreman H. C. Coleman handed the jury's finding to Judge Cleland, Guglielmo, with his eyes cast down, his left hand in his pocket and perspiration rolling from his forehead, stood up and listened to the reading of the verdict, which pronounced him guilty of murder in the first degree. The only penalty is hanging.

His attorneys asked the court 10 days in which to move for a new trial, and this was granted.

In the number of witnesses for the defense yesterday afternoon the only surprise occurred when Murphy called the accused to take the witness stand. Guglielmo complied. His face took on a dull red hue as he faced the crowd, and he could barely speak in answer to questions by his attorney. Repeatedly he was ordered to speak louder, but throughout the examination neither the court, the district attorney nor the jury were able to understand more than a fraction of what he said. A number of letters from Freda was shown him and he identified them as having been brought to him by his messenger. Some of these letters his attorney read to the jury. All were filled with affectionate phrases. In one written a few days before the writer's death she used most endearing terms, declared she loved him and always would, and wished that he might be with her all the time; that she had spoken to her mother about his coming to the house and they both agreed that he should come once a week, on Saturday night, but that she would go out two or three times a week and they could meet.

She referred to some one as an "old fool," and said that Frank should not come to the house often owing to this unnamed person's opposition. In another letter she referred to her sister Margaret as a fool, and deplored her opposition to Frank. With these exceptions the letters were mild, loving and well-worded, and reflected only the pure love of an innocent young girl. Each letter was signed "Miss Freda Garacio." Attorney Murphy after submitting the letters as evidence without objection from the state, read them to the jury.

Portland, July 2.—The steamer Oregon, the fine new boat just built at the Portland Shipbuilding Company's yards for the Oregon City Transportation Company, has been brought down to the Taylor-street dock and this morning will make her maiden trip to the Upper Willamette. She is built with an extremely light draft and will be able to reach the upper points at almost any stage of water. The boat was constructed especially for the Upper Willamette trade and is remarkably roomy for a craft of her size. Not only is there a large extent of space for bulky cargo on the lower deck, but the cabins and staterooms up above are of exceptional size. Capt. Graham has fitted up the boat with a special view to the comfort of his passengers and has made many innovations that will be appreciated by them. Among the features of the boat in the mechanical department are the electric plant and the steam capstan and hoisting apparatus. Especial pains were also taken to make the quarters of the crew comfortable. Another good idea is the sanitary arrangement of the galley and pantry, which will permit of cleanliness and an odorless atmosphere not usually found in such departments.

The Oregon goes out today on the Portland-Salem run, Sundays excepted.

New York, July 1.—A 13-year-old lad, Alexander Johnson has hanged himself at the home of F. K. Allen, president of the village of Pelham Manor, because his sister, a maid in the family, compelled him to retire early. Johnson has just graduated from the grammar school. He objected strongly on being ordered to bed but finally went and was found hanging to a bedpost.

Those Inquisitive Youngsters.
"Papa, you took the scientific course in college, didn't you?"
"Yes, dear; I spent two years on science."

"When you look in a mirror the left side of your face appears to be the right side, and the right side seems to be the left. The looking glass reverses it, doesn't it?"
"Yes."

"Then why doesn't it reverse the top and bottom of your face the same way?"
"Why—er—ah!" — Trained Motherhood.

Town Guardhouse in Pennsylvania
That Is Merely a Convenience for Prisoners.

Elizabethtown, the county seat of Essex, in the Adirondacks, possesses a comedy jail, according to the Philadelphia Ledger. It is small, having windows secured by wooden bars and a jailyard inclosed by a solid fence of three-quarter-inch boards, which a healthy male could push over with his shoulder. But the prisoners rarely, if ever, attempt to escape. Some good stories are told by Judge Kellogg, Judge Hand and other residents. It is a custom to allow the prisoners out on parole, so that they may cut the grass on neighboring lawns, do garden work, or repair roads for the village or county. Recently one prisoner, who should have returned at eight o'clock, did not apply for admission until nearly an hour later. The warden angrily demanded to know the reason, and added: "Don't let this occur again, or I will not allow you to come in. I lock the door at eight o'clock, and won't open it in the future for you." Another accused of and awaiting trial for manslaughter, overstayed his parole and pleaded as an excuse that as it was Saturday he thought he would go and spend Sunday with his wife, returning to the jail on Monday morning.

Notice.

All persons using water for flowers, lawns or garden will oblige the Company by turning off the water promptly at nine o'clock. While we keep steam up all night we do not keep the pumps running all night, nor are we expected to. We quit pumping between ten and eleven at night, leaving the tanks full. When a number of hose are allowed to run all night there is little water left in the tank by morning. Should there be a fire, which is liable to occur any night, there would be but little water for the occasion and if there was there would be no force to fight fire with, either from tank or pump with so many hose open.

THE FLEETS MEET.

JAPANESE ADMIRAL TRAP- PED AND ATTACKED THE VLADIVOSTOK SQUAD- RON.

Island of Tsu Given as Scene of Engagement—Steamer Arriving at Chefoo Having Seen
the Japanese Ships,
All Being Engaged.
—Other News.

Tokio, July 3.—The Vladivostok squadron eluded Vice-Admiral Kammimura's squadron eastward of the Island of Tsu Friday night in the darkness. A drizzling rain and fog favored the Russian vessels. The two squadrons met early in the evening, the Russians being north of Iki Island and the Japanese south of Tsu Island. They were ten miles apart.

The Russians bolted to the north-east when they were discovered by Vice-Admiral Kammimura. The latter chased them at full speed. The Japanese torpedo boats steamed ahead and entered within the range of the Russian guns. The Russian vessels vigorously shelled the Japanese torpedo boats. The firing explained the cannonading heard on Tsu Island, and gave rise to the belief that a general engagement was in progress.

Vice-Admiral Kimmura gained on the Russian ships, and was only five miles in the rear when suddenly, at 9 p. m., all the Russian vessels extinguished their lights and disappeared in the darkness. At that time the Japanese torpedo boats were pressing the Russians, who had been utilizing their searchlights. The torpedo boats failed to get close enough to the Russian squadron to discharge torpedoes.

The object of the recent Russian naval movements is not clearly understood here. It is suspected that both Russian squadrons hope to seek refuge in a neutral port of China and claim protection. Kaichou, Chefoo and even Wei Hai Wei are mentioned as their destination. The Japanese contend that they are not entitled to neutral protection under the circumstances. They deny the case is similar to that of the Russian gunboat Manjur, which was at Shanghai when hostilities commenced. The entry of the Russian warships into either Kaichou or Wei Hai Wei would prove embarrassing to the governments in control of these ports.

London, July 2.—According to a dispatch from Tokio to the Central News, only three cruisers of the Vladivostok squadron appeared in Tsu Island channel, and the torpedo boats belonging to the squadron had apparently returned to Vladivostok.

Heavy cannonading was heard ashore at 8:30 yesterday evening, the report says, but the nature and result of the fight are not known. The Russian ships, however, suffered no damage, as they were seen afterward steaming in a northerly direction.

Albany, Or., July 2.—State Game Warden J. W. Baker is authority for the statement that hunters may kill Chinese pheasants this year during the open season without fear of prosecution. At the last session of the legislature a bill was introduced to protect the pheasants until October 1, 1906. This bill was reported to have passed both houses, and people had given up the idea of killing pheasants for two years, when it was announced that officers of the lower house, in going over and correcting the records of the session preparatory to sending them to the printing office, had discovered that the bill did not receive a majority of all the members elected to the House of representatives, and hence failed to pass.

When the secretary of state sent the bill to the printing office, he indorsed it on the statement of the officers of the House who discovered the mistake, and this statement appears as a note to the bill, without other comment.

This proved unsatisfactory to gunsmiths and ammunition men, who did not know whether to order stock for the summer pheasant shooting. Accordingly, one of them wrote to Game Warden Baker, and received in reply a statement that the pheasants would be protected for the space of two years, as was intended by the legislature, and that any one caught shooting the birds during the next two years would be fined as provided by law. This scared the ammunition men out, and no stock was ordered for the summer shooting. Yesterday, however, A. Schmidt, a gunsmith, received from the state game warden the following statement:

"According to an opinion delivered by the attorney-general of the state, the law failed to pass. The result is, the law remains as before." This means that pheasants may be killed between the first day of October and the last day of November of each year, without fear of prosecution.

Portland, July 1.—Glennie D Caylor and Harry Koney two Portland school boys are somewhere near the mouth of the Columbia today in a 25-foot single sticker, en route to San Francisco and Honolulu.

Such a voyage was not heretofore dreamed of by the strongest of men, and even the sturdiest sailor would have quailed; whereas, these headstrong venturesome lads have challenged Neptune and his dangers on the world's greatest ocean.

Glennie Caylor conceived the plan, and his chum, once a student at Bishop Scott Academy, readily consented to be the crew, the Caylor boy providing the sinews of the game in the way of enough money to buy the boat, laying in a stock of bacon, coffee, pans, kettles, sea biscuits, blankets, ropes and sails. To Glennie also fell the task of persuading his father to consent to the project—a consent which was given when the father, formerly a railroad man of Pendleton, but now a prominent wholesale commission man of this city, decided that his headstrong son would make the venture whether he got parental approval or not.

The boys, their plans well under way, moored the little craft beneath the Jefferson street bridge June 23, and hand-over-hand lowered their small stock of supplies by use of a rope. The loading took most of the day. Next morning the lads induced the owner of a small naphtha launch to give them a tow to the mouth of the Willamette. When last seen by any Portland man they were sailing down the Columbia Monday morning. At that time everything was going nicely.

Twice since the departure of the little craft, which is named "The Portland" Mr. Caylor has received letters from his son. One of these communications from St. Helens was mailed at that town on the 25th. It contained twenty-five words and said everything was o. k.

Regarding the brave undertaking of his son, Mr. Caylor said:

"Glennie is large for his age has always been strong and seemed born of adventurous spirits. Always has he longed for the sea. Up to a little more than a week ago he had been working with me. One afternoon he quit work and said he was going to San Francisco, was going to make the trip in a small boat; and that in San Francisco he proposed to re-stock and make the trip to the Hawaiian islands.

"For a long time we talked the matter over, and I tried to dissuade him, but my words were in vain. Reluctantly, I gave him the money, and I did so because I knew his disposition would cause him to go with out my consent if he could not go otherwise.

"It is true that he is only 17 years of age, but I believe he is perfectly able to take care of himself. He said it was Honolulu or bust. God knows, I hope he will come out all right."

It is believed the boys are now at Astoria waiting a favorable chance to cross to bar.
